NEW RELIGION SEEN IN SINS OF MEN AT THE ROYAL THEATRE

Fox Feature Presents Wonderful Story, Great Moral and Features Stuart Holmes, Dorothy Bernard

The new photodrama, "Sins of Men," which will be repeated today at the Royal, in which William Fox presents Stuart Holmes and Dorothy Bernard as co-stars, is based on a new "religion," called "Myself," the doctrine of the big ego, the creed of selfishness. The story of the film works out with remarkable effect.

Wilhelm Schumann (Tom Burroughs), an old German philosopher, envies the success of a popular novelist, author of "Three Days." Schumann finally finds a market for his work on the new religion, and the novelty of his idea brings a large market for the book. The publisher, Scribner (Stephen Gratten), is urged by his daughter, Margaret (Pauline Barry) to publish the book written on his strange philosophy by the old German, who is accompanied to the publishing house by his daughter, Elsa (Dorothy Bernard).

On his way home Schumann rescues a child which later is named Hope (Hattie Burke) from her drunken father and the old man's wife, Gretchen (Alice Gale), takes the child into their home as a servant.
